Main speaker

Sara de Jong has a PhD in Politics (2010) from the University of Nottingham, UK. Since March 2014, she is an EU funded Marie Curie Fellow at the Department for Development Studies at the University of Vienna. In 2012, she received an Ernst Mach Grant from the OeAD to conduct research at the same institution. Her current research concerns the role of migrant employees, who work for non-governmental organisations in the context of migration and integration in Austria, the UK and the Netherlands. Her research and teaching expertise include citizenship and civil society, migration and diversity, feminism, gender and ethnicity, critical development. Her professional experience also involves working at a women's archive and library in Amsterdam, the Netherlands (2009-2012); drawing on that experience she co-edited the book Teaching Gender with Libraries and Archives: The Power of Information, CEU Press (2013).
